

GREAT INTEREST IN OPENING OF STOCK SEASON TOMORROW NIGHT

MR. JOHN WRAY, leading man with the World's Fair Stock Company, which opens in "Brewster's Millions" tomorrow night.

Everything is in readiness for the new seating arrangement, has been made, new comfortable opera chairs replacing the formerly used folding chair. Four spacious boxes have been installed, of six chairs each for the accommodation of theater parties, and the general aspect of the theater has been improved. What appears to be strictly first

KAIMUKI STAYS BY INSURGENCY

Last night Waialae, Kaimuki and Palolo Improvement Club refused, by twenty-two to sixteen, to rescind its action of September in withdrawing from the Central Improvement Committee. The motion to rescind was supported by E. A. Berndt, one of the leaders in the withdrawal. Z. K. Myers, A. B. Ingalls, President-elect T. M. Church and D. Logan, the acting president of the central body. It was opposed by Harry T. Mills, G. W. R. King, J. W. Pratt, Fred Weed and Ed Towse, their reasons being that the retiring president of the central committee, V. von Damm, had insulted Kaimuki, that the Kaimuki club could wield more influence with the powers that be if it stood on its own bottom and that the organization had always been dependent on the Kaimuki delegation for attendance at its meetings and for its achievements.

Early in the meeting Mr. Mills left the secretary's chair, refusing the privilege of making a personal explanation in reply to an attack made by J. P. Child on Vice-President Fiddes as candidate for president. He declared he was done with the club and at the close of the meeting he tendered his written resignation.

Officers for next year were elected as follows, there being a close vote for the presidency: T. M. Church, president; Charles S. Crane, vice-president; J. F. Child, secretary; W. K. Macpherson, treasurer; J. H. Fiddes, Father Valentine, E. A. Berndt, H. G. Davis and E. R. Bath, directors. Reports of progress were made by different committees and four new members were elected.

class stock company, certainly with excellent plays and several excellent individual acting members, will inaugurate the new policy of the Bijou, and that that policy, a first class dramatic stock season, will fill a long felt want, locally, there is no question.

Of the new company several members are well known here, John Wray the director and leading juvenile having established himself a favorite while playing this city with the Alcazar company at the opera house several seasons ago. James Dillon will be remembered as leading man with the Leamington, while Mr. Cooley, the character man, played here over ten years ago as a member of the Walter Stanford aggregation. Miss Virginia Brissac, who heads the company, is perhaps the most talented lady of the famous Alcazar Stock company of San Francisco for several years, leaving that company to head an organization of her own, which has been very successful and brings her here after months of negotiations between the local manager and herself.

Miss Brissac brings many famous dramatic successes for early presentation and will diversify the season with some of the better class of light comedies, the opening bill "Brewster's Millions" being of this vein, although, at the same time, having a touch of pathos running through it that calls for dramatic work of the kind seldom intermingled with comedy.

The company appears to be all that has been claimed for it, and a successful season will doubtless mark the inauguration of the first permanent dramatic stock attempted here in ten years.

It is noticeable that the shoulder collars of the moment are cut with a straight line, scarcely showing from the front.

A GREAT PHYSICIAN DECIDED IT

It was decided that the late Dr. M. Gardner, at that time Surgeon General of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, should be asked to select a theoretically incurable case of chronic Bright's Disease. He picked out an employee in Arizona whose case had been passed on by three S. P. R. R. physicians. Case involved albumen, casts, dropsy, and patient was so weak he was in night sweats. Dr. Gardner did not believe he could live sixty days.

He was put on Fulton's Renal Compound and we waited. In thirty days improvement was reported and less than six months later patient was recommended for light employment, tests by the local physicians whom we never saw reporting disappearance of the albumen and casts. Dr. Gardner's favorable report (our thirty-fourth test case) caused the closure of the negotiations and the determination to announce the results. Fulton's Renal Compound is getting in kidney disease.

It can be had at Honolulu Drug Co., Fort street.

BEDOUIIN CHIEF AS HOST

A Bedouin chief is esteemed at least as highly for his prowess as a social entertainer as for his valor in time of war. The sheik must be a fine warrior and a successful host. Hospitality toward strangers who come to his door is part and parcel of the Bedouin's code of honor, and it would be next to impossible to find, from the Valley of Zered to Damascus, a man who would refuse the shelter of his tent of hair to a tired traveler.

Desert encampments, be they of the Shammer, Ibn Shailan, Rawailah al Anazeh, or other tribe, are arranged according to an almost identical plan. The tents form an inclosed rectangle, and the guest tent of the sheik is erected in a central position. At its door a spear is placed point upward in the ground. In some districts the tents are made of camel hair and their manufacture is carried on by a distinct tribe or community of gipsy tentmakers, who also deal in camel hair and goat hair for repairing purposes. Six or eight poles uphold the structure, the ends and one side being pegged to the ground, and the whole of the other side being left quite open. This is the "house of hair" of the Arab sheik, wherein all are welcome and no guest is more favored than another.

The tent is divided into two apartments, one of which is occupied by the sheik's wives, but travelers who sit in the other apartment may quite easily converse with the unseen beauties of the chief's establishment, and such social intercourse is not prohibited as a rule. It would be an act of gross discourtesy for a traveler to ignore the presence of a great tent and to erect a tent of his own in the neighborhood. Furthermore, it would be "asking for trouble." While the sheik would protect, at whatever cost, the guest who had sought his door, he would not think twice about plundering the foolish stranger who had passed it by.

Quite large villages are formed by the encampments of some of the important desert tribes, and these are regularly visited by commercial travelers from Damascus, to they board a regular bazaar or market street of tent shops. In one particular, at least the lot of such a traveler is happier than that of his European confrere—he is boarded and lodged free of cost in the guest chamber.

In such a village there would be a separate guest chamber, distinct from the residence of the sheik, and this would be a resort for gossipers throughout the day. Games are played in these guest chambers, in which of course the visitor may join; and one of them has recently found his way to Europe, apparently via America, and is now fairly popular in London, though in a modified form. It is known by the title of "go ban," although this is not its Bedouin name, and in Europe it is played upon a draft board. In the desert it is played with stones upon the floor, which is chalked into squares. A detailed description is unnecessary, but the game consists in maneuvering to get nine stones in three straight rows (in the Western game, to get five men in one straight row.)

Coffee is placed before every visitor to the Bedouin tent. Essentially, the taste for this preparation is an acquired one. Mark Twain's long cherished vision of the delights of coffee drinking in the luxurious East was shattered at the moment that he raised the cup to his lips, but it would be an insult to the hospitality of the sheik to display such distaste as this when partaking of the beverage in a Bedouin tent. On the advent of a visitor green coffee berries are roasted in a kind of ladle over the fire, and when done, crushed in a mortar and served in tiny cups, which fortunately for the Western guest, hold little more than a liqueur glass. The preparation has the consistency and appearance of mur and the coffee grounds irritates the throat of one unused to the luxury in a highly unpleasant manner. But it is an established form of welcome and must be acknowledged by smacking the lips as if with enjoyment.

A feature of the large hats of the season is the brim of uneven width, the back portion being several inches wider than the front and sides. This is only becoming to a few persons and should be chosen with care, viewing the effect from all sides before purchasing.

WINDOW SHOW MAGNIFICENT

For a window display both elaborate and artistic, seldom if ever has there been anything in Honolulu to put a shade over the windows of W. W. Dimond & Co., Ltd., for this Christmas. It is worth paying an admission fee to see, but the firm is satisfied with the custom the show attracts, besides being glad to contribute to the festive appearance of the town.

Set against a dark blue background spangled with silver stars, appearing through a large oval opening in gilded grilling, is a jolly big bust of Santa Claus upon a high pedestal draped in snowy gauze. Shelves on the sides of the pedestal are sustaining silver, glass and brass ware, also fine grades of crockeryware. Flanking the central figure just described are two classical busts upon pillars, all of marble. Poinsettia leaves and flowers are intertwined in the grillwork. Many beautiful wares are disposed effectively upon the baseboard of the window.

In another window the central decoration is a large five-pointed star set inside a circle, the design being trimmed with holly leaves and berries. An electrolite holds the middle ground beneath, on either side a great variety of rich wares in crystal and metals being tastefully arranged. Both windows have a fine installation of electric bulbs, by which the whole composition is flooded with glorious illumination at night. Who misses the Dimond windows day or night will be unable fully to enjoy Honolulu impressions of Christmas this year of 1912.
